Subject: FW: Governor Deal: Team to combat risks of Ebola should the need arise

Dear Board of Regents and Presidents:

The Governor signed an executive order today establishing a team of experts to examine State preparedness and to issue potential recommendations regarding the Ebola virus. Governor Deal's announcement is below.

Frederick Quinn, MS, PhD, Professor of Infectious Diseases at The University of Georgia, will represent the University System of Georgia by serving on the state response team.

Meanwhile, the CDC and Georgia Department of Public Health continue to maintain communications regarding preparedness measures. The following two links regarding guidance for colleges and universities have been issued to date, and we will provide updates as necessary:

CDC - <http://wwwnc.cdc.gov/travel/page/advice-for-colleges-universities-and-students-about-ebola-in-west-africa>

Georgia Department of Public Health - <http://dph.georgia.gov/guidance-colleges-and-universities>

As this is a dynamic issue, it is important that we continue to remain alert, remain in close communication and adapt existing action plans to the guidance received from the CDC, Georgia Department of Public Health, other appropriate agencies and the newly-formed state response team, as additional information becomes available.

The safety of our students, faculty and staff is our top priority. Thank you for your continued leadership on our campuses and in our local communities.

Regards,

Chancellor Huckaby

Deal: Team to combat risks of Ebola should the need arise

Advisory group comprised of leaders in health and research communities, state agencies

Gov. Nathan Deal today named the members of the Georgia Ebola Response Team, which was created by executive order to assess current state health and emergency management procedures and produce necessary recommendations to minimize any potential impact of the disease in Georgia.

“Those that have been chosen to serve on the panel are leaders in their respective fields, and I’m confident that their combined talents and experience will allow them to effectively examine state preparedness and provide all necessary recommendations,” said Deal. “By opening up lines of communication between the private and public sector, Georgia is uniquely positioned to combat the risks of Ebola should the need arise and protect the health of the people of our state. An informed public and a prepared group of first responders and health care professionals can save lives. Let me reiterate: As a state, we are taking every precaution to make certain Georgia stands prepared.”

The Ebola response team will be chaired by Brenda Fitzgerald, commissioner of the Georgia Department of Public Health. A full list of team members below:
